Algaewithumbrella-likehead discovered in Andaman Island

A&N Islands are home to some of the last remaining healthy coral reefs in the world

New Delhi, Aug. 22

In a new discovery, a plant species with an umbrella-like cap has been found on the Island of Andaman & Nicobar. A team of marine biologists from the Central University of Punjab discovered a new marine algae species in the Andaman archipelago, which has been named Jalakanyaka. The species is also the first of the genus Acetabularia to be discovered in India. The new algae species has been named 'Acetabularia jalakanyakae', after the Sanskrit word 'Jalakanyaka' meaning the 'goddess of oceans' or 'mermaid'. The marine species has been named as inspiration from Hans Christian Anderson's fictional character, The Little Mermaid fairy tale.

Acetabularia jalakanyakae was accidentally discovered when Dr. Felix Bast, who led the study, was on a family trip to the Island in May 2019. Upon first coming across the species, he took it as a variant of a similar species.

However, after studying the sample for more than one and a half years, a new and unique Acetabularia

Andaman & Nicobar Islands are home to some of the last remaining healthy coral reefs in the world. In addition to that, algal diversity is one of the highest in the Andaman & Nicobar Islands.

Oxygen producers: "Although marine algae produces almost two-third of oxygen in the air we breathe, the world virtually knows nothing about them highlighting the importance of species discoveries like this," said Prof. Raghavendra Prasad Tiwari, Vice-Chancellor, Central University of Punjab.

Food producers: Single-celled marine species are key to all the life forms on Earth. Algae convert atmospheric carbon dioxide into food for the marine ecosystem. They are at the base of the food chain. Also, when the algae die, they are consumed by organisms called decomposers (mostly fungi and bacteria).

Petroleum fossils: Algae are also responsible for petroleum. When they die, they sink to the ocean floor. Over the years, this layer turns into what we know as petroleum. "Petroleum is essentially fossils of algae; the reason we call it as fossil fuel," told Dr. Bast to PBNS.

Research & studies: Algae is not only important for the environment but for studies and research too. The newly discovered species has a giant cell which is important from the study's point of view. The authors of the study said that having such a giant cell is advantageous for molecular biologists who study cellular processes; as they can see it and manipulate it with the naked eye. For this reason, Acetabularia is considered a model organism.

Climate change is increasingly becoming a concern, putting in danger the ecology. The rise in temperature decreases oxygen levels in the water, affecting organisms that depend on oxygen to live, including the algae. Further, ocean acidification is also a threat to organisms in the ocean. Algae, which has industrial, medical, and survival importance, is of key importance, thus, making its discovery further significant. (Source: newsonair.com)
