Urban residents seethe over encroachment of footpaths in the prominent market places

Port Blair, Dec 19: Repeated appeals by the civic body and the Traffic Police notwithstanding, encroachment of footpaths in prominent market places continue unabated in the city. If waste item dumped opposite the footpath Tillai Bakery, in the heart of the city, is any indication, traders in the city seem to care too little to keep footpaths clear exclusively for free flow of vehicular traffic clear of any obstacles.

"The roads, road berms and footpaths are meant exclusively for free flow of vehicular traffic & Pedestrians, thereby capturing of roads, footpaths, pavements & way side amenities by illegal & unauthorized parking of vehicles and dumping of waste materials is strict violation of the Motor Vehicle Act and is treated as obstructive/un-authorized Parking. However, traders in the city can be found encroaching upon public spaces like footpaths congesting the effective road space/motorway thus causing danger to the motorists as well as other road users," said a resident of Aberdeen Bazar.

"Traffic bursting at its seams, parking woes, increasing accident figures and rising pollution levels has become a major concern for the administration today with the city running short of space to accommodate the burgeoning number of vehicles. Despite deployment of cops, ever burgeoning vehicular population has made it extremely difficult for the Traffic police to manage the situation in the city. Wrong side parking, over-speeding by vehicles, accidents etc have presently become common in the city roads. To add to the woes is encroachment of pedestrian paths in the city. While the administration should identify spaces for construction of multi-level parking lots in different parts of the city, heavy penalty should be imposed on traders found causing obstacles on footpaths meant for pedestrians," said another.

MP urges CS to schedule 4 monthly passenger sailing to Nicobars, publish schedule in advance

Port Blair, Dec 19: The Member of Parliament of Andaman and Nicobar Islands, Mr. Kuldeep Rai Sharma has requested the Chief Secretary of Andaman and Nicobar Administration to direct the concerned department to schedule sailing of passenger vessels for Nicobar District at least four times in a month and also publication of the schedule well in advance so that people can plan medical treatment and mainland journey accordingly.

In a letter addressed to the Chief Secretary, the Member of Parliament mentioned that the people living in Great Nicobar Islands have been finding themselves totally isolated due to scheduling only one passenger ship in the last nearly 26 days.

He pointed out that after a gap of nearly 16 days MV Sindhu had reached Campbell Bay on 6th December 2021 after which no ship schedule has been published for Campbell Bay. Before MV Sindhu, MV Kalighat had reached Campbell Bay on 20 November 2021. The Member of Parliament highlighted that a large number of residents of Great Nicobar are presently stranded at Port Blair, many of whom are patients and attendants who have come for treatment in Port Blair while many others have reached Port Blair from mainland and are not able to reach back to Great Nicobar. He added that similarly, there are stranded passengers for other remote islands of Nicobar District too, who are waiting for a sailing schedule for Nicobar District. The Member of Parliament mentioned that in normal cases four to five passenger ships used to be scheduled for Campbell Bay in a month but now hardly two ships are being scheduled for Campbell Bay which is causing great inconvenience to the public.

Bell hooks changed

In the preface to the 2014 reissue of her classic text Am I a Woman? Black Women and Feminism, bell hooks, who styled her name in lower case letters to keep the attention on her ideas, wrote of imagining her mother as her ideal reader. This led her to develop a jargon-free prose style that made her work accessible to all her readers. This was necessary, because the ideas hooks articulated were complex, challenging long-held platitudes about the nature of power, social and economic hierarchies, and the role of activism and reform, not only within the women's movement, but movements led by the marginalised everywhere. She rejected the idea that different kinds of injustice existed in isolation from each other and argued that to address one, it is necessary to tackle the others.

hooks, who died aged 69 on December 15, was many things — writer, poet, teacher, activist. But it is as a theorist of love that she may have had the most profound impact. She encountered love as more than just a romantic notion, as a transformative, healing power, during her spiritual journey as a "Christian Buddhist". It was this power of love, she said, that could most effectively end oppression.

Today, hooks's "ethic of love" as well as her intersectional understanding of injustice are accepted wisdom — much of that is because of the enormous impact of her work. Yet, in no way have these ideas lost power or relevance. At a time when social justice is often reduced to slogans used to sell everything from soap and jewellery to electoral promises, reading hooks is like a tonic. Her ideas resist simplification. She muddled the distinction between oppressor and victim, enriching the understanding of oppression itself and challenging the belief that creating a more just world is simply about grabbing a larger share of the pie.

WHEN IS IT OK TO TAKE A RAPID ANTIGEN TEST FOR COVID?

With Christmas around the corner and Covid-19 case numbers rising, it's important to keep getting tested when you have symptoms, have been exposed to the virus, or are going to a high-risk environment.

Now we have access to PCR tests (known as RT-PCR, or reverse transcription-polymerase chain reaction, tests) and rapid antigen tests to detect SARS-CoV-2, the virus that causes Covid.

So which tests should you use? And what's the difference?

How the tests work
In Australia, PCR tests are used to diagnose SARS-CoV-2 infections. This test looks for SARS-CoV-2 genetic material.

RT-PCR converts viral RNA to DNA and amplifies the genetic sequence, making billions of copies, to a point where these copies can be detected.

Because the test can amplify tiny amounts of viral genetic material, it's considered the gold standard and can detect infection in earlier stages than other tests like rapid antigen tests.

Rapid antigen tests instead detect viral proteins. The proteins bind in the solution to antibodies that become fluorescent to indicate the presence of the proteins.

Rapid antigen tests are:
1. Quicker than PCR tests (15-20 minutes versus hours to days to get a result)
2. Can be done in the home compared to having to line up and wait for a swab, which then has to be analysed in a laboratory.

But they're less sensitive than a PCR test because there is no amplification process.

How effective are they?
While both tests are more likely to correctly detect an infection when the person's viral load is high, PCR tests are more sensitive than rapid antigen tests.

An Australian study comparing the sensitivity (correctly diagnosing SARS-CoV-2 infection when you have it) of one type of rapid antigen test compared to a PCR test, found 77% of positive antigen test results aligned with PCR test results.

This rose to 100% when people were tested within a week of the onset of symptoms.

The Therapeutic Goods Administration provides a list of approved rapid antigen tests, which have results that align with PCR test 80-95% of the time, provided the tests are done within a week of symptom onset. Some of these tests are rated as very high sensitivity, with 95% agreement with PCR tests.

Which test to take when?
Take a RT-PCR test if you:
1. Have Covid symptoms.
2. Have a known exposure to someone with Covid.

3. Do a rapid antigen test and get a positive result, because PCR confirmation is required.
4. Are required to by your health department to be released from quarantine or isolation.

5. Are required to by a health department to get permission to travel to a location. A PCR is the best of choice in these situations because it is more accurate at diagnosing an infection.

Consider a rapid antigen test if you:
1. Are planning to visit a sensitive site (for example, an aged care facility)
2. Are planning to have contact with someone at high risk from Covid (for example, an elderly person or someone on immunosuppressive treatment), and you want to protect them.
3. Have Covid symptoms but can't get to a PCR testing site.
4. Are going to an event where lots of people will be mixing, particularly if it's being held indoors where the risk of transmission is considerably higher.
5. Want to quickly check whether you might have a SARS-CoV-2 infection.

6. Are part of a regular Covid surveillance program (some workplaces require it, particularly in situations where the person is not fully vaccinated).

The rapid antigen tests considered to be a screening tool. In other words, it can indicate that you might be infected, but a PCR test is needed to confirm the result.

While a negative rapid antigen test result is not a guarantee that you aren't infected, it does provide more protection for your contacts than not testing.

How often should I take a rapid antigen test?

It depends on the reason you are taking the test. If you're part of a surveillance program, take the test when you are asked to.

If you don't have symptoms, taking the test to a three times over a week can help improve test sensitivity because viral load waxes and wanes. Test sensitivity will be highest when the viral load is at its peak.

How does the Omicron variant affect testing?

The highly mutated Omicron variant appears to still be detected by both PCR and rapid antigen tests.

Ordinarily, a PCR test indicates whether or not you have a SARS-CoV-2 infection but not which variant you have. Genome sequencing is needed to find that out.

However, some PCR tests look for a specific genetic sequence that is missing in the Omicron variant (called S gene target failure). Those particular PCR tests can not only detect a positive result but also

Port Blair, Dec 19: Four Andaman and Nicobar Islands fishermen, who were arrested by Myanmar Coast Guard over eight months back, have finally returned to Port Blair. After their release from Myanmar jail, the Andaman fishermen were stranded in New Delhi for nearly 14 days and returned here on Thursday. The four were among ten fishermen taken into custody on April 10 by Myanmar authorities for having strayed into their waters. Four others were from Tamil Nadu, and two others were from West Bengal. According to reports, the Andaman and Nicobar Administration arranged transportation of these four fishermen from New Delhi to Port Blair as they did not have money. The Andaman fishermen are S. Kumar from Junglinghat, G. Raja from Chakkargoon, Jai Seelan from Chakkargoon and Ajith Kumar Azhagar from Port Blair. Talking to the media here, the four fishermen narrated harrowing tales of what they went through in Myanmar. Two of them were wounded when they were fired upon by Myanmar Coast Guard on the day of their arrest. While one of them was shot on his waist, the other fishermen suffered bullet injuries on his right hand. However, according to the fishermen they were neither given proper medical treatment nor food. For the initial three months, they were served food only twice a day. Since then, they got food three a day, but the quality was insufficient. They said even an injured fisherman was not even given proper treatment in jail. To add to their ordeal, on the day of arrest all their belongings and the parts of their fishing boat were stolen.
